Tanner Knorr – Communications Manager

Tanner manages EplerWood International's communications campaigns, including events, PR, and social media to ensure stakeholders worldwide receive relevant information on education, training, and sustainable tourism management approaches. He is also a Teaching Assistant at Harvard Extension.

Tanner holds a Bachelor's in Archaeology and a Master's in Administrative Studies, concentrating in Economic Development and Tourism Management from Boston University. He owns his own business called Off Season Adventures that strives for sustainable tourism practices in Tanzania. The business pushes safaris and cultural excursions during the off season travel to promote economic development, carbon offsets all flight, vehicle, and accommodation emissions, and makes tangible community investments in the country. Much of the inspiration for the business comes from Megan Epler Wood's book Sustainable Tourism on a Finite Planet.
